HOME PROGRAM: Use of Language “What Would You Say?” and “How Would You Respond?” Scenarios, Version B

Practicing tasks that address goals need to be conducted every day for positive outcomes. Patient and caregivers performing home programs each day — allow for daily work toward goals.

Instructions: Listed are descriptions of various communication situations. Role-play with a family member how to respond.

- You are visiting a neighbor’s home for a social event, and it is unusually cold in the living room. The uncomfortableness is to the extent you are considering going home early.
 - You are listening to a story from a friend about how happy they are that their neighborhood dog has been removed due to excessive barking, and you have mixed feelings about what the friend is saying.
 - Your favorite brand of deodorant is no longer offered at your drugstore.
 - Someone is asking you for advice -- and you really don’t want to give it, in this particular situation.
 - You don’t remember an acquaintance’s name -- and you want to avoid asking directly, due to fear of how this will look.
 - You want to warn someone about an issue that would be considered a touchy subject.
 - You need to see the doctor for a yearly examination, and the receptionist isn’t giving you a straight answer on when you can make an appointment.
 - You are taking clothes to a consignment shop, and you had read or heard in advance that the payment is 50-50 in sharing what is made on the sale. You arrive to the consignment shop, and the sales clerk informs you that the arrangement is 30-70, meaning you will only make 30% of what the clothes will be sold for.
 - You are working on a project, and someone keeps asking you questions that are off-topic, and it is distracting from the subject at hand.
 - You have a very busy schedule and you have been asked to serve on a committee in a volunteer capacity for a charity organization that you strongly emotionally support, but you are aware that you wouldn’t have the time commitment that would be required.
