HOME PROGRAM: Use of Language “What Would You Say?” and “How Would You Respond?” Scenarios, Version D

Practicing tasks that address goals need to be conducted every day for positive outcomes. Patient and caregivers performing home programs each day — allow for daily work toward goals.

Instructions: Listed are descriptions of various communication situations. Role-play with a family member how to respond.

- There is a person at your faith community that repeatedly communicates dark humor jokes -- and you feel it is not appropriate for that setting, and you can see it upsets some of the older members of the faith community.
 - You are a patient at a hospital, and you have been told to ask for help to go to the restroom — since you are still recovering from your surgery. You put on the call-light, but on a consistent basis, it takes for up to 20 minutes for an answer to the call light, and you are afraid you might have an accident.
 - You have a friend that repeatedly avoids eye contact with you, and it is starting to get worse and interferes with communication.
 - You need to refill your prescription, and you realize that the money in your flexible spending account is frozen. In addition, you don't have any personal money in your checking or savings accounts to cover it.
 - There has been a misunderstanding about a communication that occurred, and the person you spoke to felt discounted. This was not your intention in the conversation.
 - You are at a department store, and the shirts you saw in an advertisement are marked with a different price than what you recall.
 - You want to bring up a subject that has been discussed previously, but you didn't have a chance to ask questions or make the statements that you desired to make originally.
 - You want to encourage someone to consider finding out about another related line of work that they would probably be gifted toward.
 - The washing machine is making an unusual sound and you aren't sure whether it warrants bringing it in to a repair shop.
